

on their own

Each day, 54% of children in Rwanda go without a basic human right - education. There is only one reason why these children are denied this right. Lack of resources such as uniforms, notebooks, and even pencils are among the reasons that African children stay out of school.

Lack of emotional outlets keep children out of school, too. Many children in Africa head their own households due to the loss of their parents to genocide, famine, and disease. The heartbreak of losing their families and working to keep themselves and their siblings alive has hindered the academic and emotional growth of some of our world's poorest citizens.

What We do

The Change Exchange is a registered non-profit organization. Our mission is to directly aid the academic and emotional development of children in Africa. Our organization renovates, rebuilds, and supports schools and counseling centers throughout the region.

Many children throughout Africa are impoverished, orphaned, and victims of war and genocide. By providing both academic resources and emotional outlets, our goal is to help develop well-rounded, successful citizens that will, in turn, build a flourishing nation and a peaceful world.

how We do it

Our organization generates and supports community-based programs within the United States in order to connect children worldwide. Our goal is to educate, motivate, and inspire children and families to take action and lead the way as global citizens of our world.

Education is key to making our world a better place. The Change Exchange works to inspire and foster change in the hearts of America's youth while also changing the minds of Africa's youth through educational initiatives, completing "the change exchange."
